The 14th Indian Social Work Conference (ISWC) 2026 is a significant academic and professional gathering organized by the National Association of Professional Social Workers in India (NAPSWI) in collaboration with partner organization-The Social Work Department of Assam Don Bosco University, Guwahati, Assam, India. Following the legacy of the 13th conference held in Bhubaneswar, this edition transitions to the North East at The Assam Don Bosco University, Guwahati.

The concept of "Viksit Bharat" (Developed India) also necessitates a shift from traditional "Welfare" models to a comprehensive "Wellbeing" framework. This reimagined practice emphasizes quality of life, mental health resilience, and the integration of technology to ensure that progress is equitable and sustainable for all citizens.

AIMS AND OBJECTIVES

- ➔ To provide a forum for academicians and practitioners to redefine social work interventions in the context of a developing India.
- ➔ To explore the shift from a service-delivery welfare approach to holistic human wellbeing.
- ➔ To foster collaboration between social workers, government bodies, and technical experts to address emerging social challenges.
- ➔ To document evidence-based practices that contribute to national prosperity and social justice.

ABOUT THEME AND SUB-THEMES

From Welfare to Wellbeing: Reimagining Social Work Practice for Viksit Bharat

Professional social work has transitioned from charity work to formal education in early 20th-century which has progressively passed through various goal posts like welfare, development, right based development, empowerment and finally wellbeing. Its earlier foundational definitions were focused on developing personality through conscious adjustments between individuals and their environment (Mary Richmond,1917); based on scientific knowledge and skills in human relations, aiming for social and personal satisfaction(Walter Friedlander,1955); emphasized a combination of social services, methods, and social policy(Gisela Konopka,1958); as the "art" of using scientific methods to help individuals, groups, or communities (Herbert Stroup,1960); highlighted a humanitarian, scientific approach to fostering a full life (Indian Conference of Social Work (1957). The joint definition by IASSW and IFSW have stated human rights and social justice as its pillars (2000) and later on , it has added that social work engages people and structures to address life challenges and enhance wellbeing (2014). Today, social work is recognized as an academic discipline and a practice-based profession globally, focused on empowerment and social change, to enhance the social well-being, sustainable development, quality of life, and advance human rights and social, economic, and environmental justice.

India has a vast ecosystem of social work education, research and action. It has more than 526 social work educational institutions, enrolling around 1, 20,00 students in undergraduate and post graduate programmes. We have less than another two and half decades to achieve goals of a Viksit Bharat (Developed India).The role of social work profession becomes increasingly significant in contributing in the attainment of basic parameters of developed India - inclusive growth and social justice; sustainable development; human development and social wellbeing; good governance and strong institutional base; and innovation and technological advancement. The social work community needs to continuously engage in research, critical reflection, dialogue, and collective deliberation to explore innovative ways of strengthening social work education and practice in support of the vision of Viksit Bharat. As India progresses towards becoming a developed nation, social work educators, practitioners, researchers, and institutions have a significant responsibility in promoting inclusive growth, social justice, and sustainable development.

Reimagining social work for Viksit Bharat requires the profession to embrace innovation, harness the potential of technology, utilize evidence-based interventions, and encourage community-driven development approaches. At the same time, these efforts must remain anchored in the fundamental values of the profession, including human dignity, social justice, democratic participation, equity, inclusiveness, and social responsibility. As both an academic discipline and a professional practice, social work profession has a crucial role in strengthening social institutions, empowering communities, advocating for marginalized and vulnerable populations, and contributing meaningfully to nation-building processes.

Through interdisciplinary collaboration, rigorous research, policy engagement, ethical practice, and social innovation, professional social work can serve as a catalyst for building a resilient, compassionate, equitable, and developed India.

Like every year, the Indian Social Work Conference (ISWC) seeks to provide a platform for discussing and deliberating on the evolving theoretical and practical dimensions of the social work profession. This conference aims to critically examine the changing paradigms of social work and explore innovative approaches, strategies, and frameworks that can strengthen the profession's contribution to national development. It also endeavors to identify, develop, and design various facets of social work education, practice, research, and policy engagement to enhance the profession's role in achieving the vision and goals of Viksit Bharat through inclusive, equitable, and sustainable development.
